NINE MULES ARE ROASTED.

Stock Barn of T. P. Johnson Burned Early Sunday Morning.

HEAVY LOSS SUSTAINED

Hardly A Doubt That the Fire Was Started By An Incendiary.

The large stock barn of Mr. Thos. P. Johnson, near Oak Grove, was burned at three o'clock Sunday morning, with its valuable contents. There were fourteen head of horses and mules in the barn and eight of them were burned to death.

The frantic struggles of the animals broke open one of the doors from which six of the imprisoned beasts escaped—more or less injured. One died soon afterwards and two others are so badly burned that they are not expected to live.

The barn contained a large quantity of hay and corn, 120 bushels of seed wheat and the entire gearing outfit for the farm, all of which was lost.

The building was one of the finest barns in the county, erected by the late Frank Moore, at a cost when new of $2,500. The entire loss of barn and contents was about $4,000. The fire was clearly the work of an incendiary, as there was no fire about the building.

The loss was partially insured, the policy being for about $1,500.

WARMEST WEATHER

Yet to come, But Will be Followed by Frost.

According to the predictions of Hicks, the following weather conditions will prevail during the month of August. About the 4th there will be a rapid rise of temperature, cloudy and general storm conditions, with rain, wind and thunder, passing eastward from the 4th to the 8th. Fair and cooler weather will follow close on the heels of these storms. The 11th and 12th are reactionary storm dates and a secondary series of disturbances will develop and will last probably to about the 18th, during which time rain and wind will visit many parts of the country. Change to very much cooler will come in from the north-west on the heels of these disturbances, extending to the 21st.

The 23rd to 25th will likely bring a crisis of summer heat, followed by a decided and general change to much cooler with almost or quite frost temperature over much of the country to the northward. The last week of the month will bring a violent storm period. Tidal waves, seismic and earthquake phenomena are almost a certainty in many parts of the globe not far from August 30. Violent storms of rain, wind and thunder will sweep over central and Northern states. Very cool weather, with frost to the North, may be expected to follow this period. The crisis of the very cool wave will fall in the opening days of September.

New deaths..... 3
Total deaths..... 57
Total foci..... 41

New Orleans, July 31.—Twenty-seven new cases of yellow fever were reported in New Orleans yesterday. There were three deaths. Only four new foci were reported, and it is a source of encouragement that the spread of the disease is becoming slower and slower.

Though this was Sunday, the work of sanitation, fumigation, oiling and screening went on just the same, and will continue daily until the city has been thoroughly screened and made mosquito proof. The record for today shows little change from that of yesterday, except in the reduction of the number of deaths. The number of new foci is also again a source of encouragement, showing that the spread is becoming slower and slower.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition, beauty, vigor and cheerfulness. When the kidneys are out of order or diseased, the face and complexion become sallow and the system generally is affected.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches the age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a Home of Swamp-Root pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Addresses an Open Letter to Tobacco Growers.

My Dear Sir:

I have no doubt that every member of our splendid organization now fully realizes the possibilities of the combined efforts of farmers, and of each member who has stood honest and true to this great cause feels a stronger man for the part he is daily playing in this great fight. Obstacles were daily thrown in our way; first to prevent organization, to ridicule our efforts were their course, and next to prevent a sale of tobacco after it was splendidly prepared for market; but we knew our strength and were determined to exert it to the extent of honesty, justice and fairness, which we knew would win our fight, but throughout the whole fight our Executive Committee has carefully weighed the rights of the other side; and been very careful to see that no injury or injustice was done them. We really wanted what we were entitled to—a better price and a voice in the management of our own affairs. Now that we all feel assured that success is ours, for reasons which none of us doubt; first, the contracting with Mr. G. Reussens, one of the very ablest tobacco men in the world as our New York Agent; second, safe financial arrangements; third, and best of all—the rapid selling of our tobacco at Association prices, which are so decidedly better than the prices of the past few years. I want to call your attention to an obligation we each have to the others. First, we should pledge our 1905 crop to the Association and put our whole determination to the effort of aiding in getting every man who has not pledged his 1905 crop, whether he has heretofore been a member or not, to pledge it. If you feel that you cannot accomplish this alone, get up little groups of neighbors to go with you to see such parties and assure them that it is not only best for your community, but best for them. We can make our success complete without a doubt, and for all time if every member will resolutely determine to secure another member and thus make us so solid the world will marvel at our strength. I want to call your attention to a few things our enemies are reported to have said. When an effort was made to get buyers to combine against buying our tobacco, it is said one very prominent buyer remarked that "it would never do for farmers know their strength, for if we do it will cost buyers millions of dollars." This should be our battle cry. Every farmer should remember this carefully and resent it by strengthening our organization in every honorable way. Again I would admonish you of a proposition our enemy will make, which is to buy tobacco in the patch. They are trespassing upon a farmer's intelligence when they make such a proposition. Surely no farmer will believe him sincere in such a proposition, but on the contrary see clearly that it is done for the purpose of breaking up our organization, if not for the present, for the future. We have not organized for the present only, every farmer realizes his only safety is in organization for all time. Be steadfast, earnest and energetic. Do not listen to the honeyed talk of the man who has in the past injured you, and while we should lend respectful courtesy to everyone, show these buyers the farmers are no longer a set of dupes, infants or fools.

Yours truly,

EVER WATCHFUL.

A Little Care Will Save Many Hopkinsville Readers Future Trouble.

Watch the kidney secretions. See that they have the amber hue of health;

The discharge not excessive or infrequent;

Contain no "brick-dust like sediment";

Doan's Kidney Pills will do this for you.

They watch the kidneys and cure them when they're sick. Hopkinsville testimony proves it. J. W. Tunks, of 312 W. Seventh St., who is employed at the M. C. Kinsley planing mill, says: "The condition of my health was such as to cause me a great deal of worry about my future. I had almost constant aching across the middle of my back and the kidney secretions were highly colored, excessive and irregular, in fact, the disorder was so pronounced that it had been said I was bordering on diabetes. I also suffered at times with indigestion which caused me a great deal of distress. At one time I was scarcely able to do any work at all for nearly a year. I doctored and tried various remedies but nothing did me any permanent good until I used Doan's Kidney Pills which I procured at L. A. Johnson's drug store. I had them only a few days when I noticed a change for the better and by the time I had finished the box I found that I had brought about a decided improvement in my condition. I am convinced me of their real worth and I am more than thankful for the relief that I have received. For sale by all dealers. Price 50c. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other."

The new filtration plant has been put into operation at Paris, Ky.

Group instantly relieved. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. Perfectly safe. Never fails. At any drug store.

GRANDFATHER.

Grandfather sits in his chair in the kitchen. Grandmother dear and me. The fire burns red in the stove, I can see it. Grandfather says how he used to hold the fire.

Who are you now holding me? Grandmother dear was a pretty young lady. Father, her two boys, you see.

The tea kettle bubbles and boils so sleep. Over the fire there. Grandfather tells how the injuns slept him.

That's how he lost his hair. And once, when he was a little shaver, I was a bit bigger than me.

He had a squirrel that slept in his pocket. Tame as it could be.

Grandfather says he could whistle a soldier. But the tea kettle bubbles so. Grandfather's voice made up in the attic. Quicker and softer and slower.

The tea kettle bubbles and boils so sleep. I have such a heavy head I don't remember, but grandfather says that.

He carried me up to bed. Carolyn S. Bailey, in Good Housekeeping.

A SHY BLUE VIOLET

WHAT! Weeping again, my discontented "Violet!" questioned the fairy as she came from her mossy couch under an acorn cup, and wiped away, with the hem of her gauzy robe, the tear which glistened in the blue violet's eye. "Discontented with your beautiful surroundings, my dear?" she continued. "But you shall have your wish to-night, so smile your sweetest and come with me," and the fairy queen folded her favorite close in her arms and they sailed away through the chilly night air of that early spring-time.

"Remain you here," said the indignant fairy, "and see and hear all the wonderful things you have longed for. Then if you wish to return to your home on the shady side of the mossy boulder, all well and good; if not, you shall remain in the city, and I will arrive for my sweetest flower; and the fairy left the Violet alone in the great city, while she hastened away to make others happy."

Violet waited and shivered in her nest of strange green and she could hardly breathe, for the air was close, stifling and pungent with queer new odors. The noise from without fairly shook her frail frame, and each time that she shivered the most wonderful perfume floated from her deep blue gown; but Violet did not realize that, for the perfume had always lingered about her, she never once dreamed, in all her discontent, that she was so rarely blessed.

"I feel so queer and lonely, and I can hardly breathe," cried the Violet aloud. "I wonder when I will see the wonderful things the fairy queen promised."

"Who speaks before the time and in such strange language?" questioned a loud voice with a perfumed breath; and Violet quivered the more on her slender stem, as she saw the tall, lily-bending figure bend; and as she shivered and trembled, her perfume, in great quantities, floated about her.

"Who speaks?" again demanded the Lily. "The city's clock across the way says 'tis but three minutes to one. Who dares to frolic before it strikes the hour?"

"I did not know—I am very sorry," the Blue Violet stammered.

"Flowers!" exclaimed the Lily, "some stranger is here."

Up flared the lilies in eye-blinking radiance; and against all rules every flower in the place walked from vases, jars and baskets, and crowded about the shy, straggling Violet.

A pair of massive doors swung open and a chilly blast came out of a dark.

Old-Time Fishing.

Years ago the writer was invited to accompany two or three friends to fish for pickerel at night in a rather shallow millpond, located in a Massachusetts town. A flat-bottomed boat was used, and an iron rod about four feet long was attached to the bow of the boat in a perpendicular position. On the upper end of the rod was placed an iron receptacle containing a fire. "Pitch pine knots" were used, which burned for a long time and supplied a sufficient amount of light to enable the man at the bow of the boat to see the bottom of the pond. A spear with four or five barbed prongs was used, the boat being gently propelled by one of the party. The man at the bow with spear in readiness kept a sharp lookout. When a pickerel was seen, a quick thrust was made with the spear. The man had practically a sure thing of it, the pickerel having little chance to escape from the unorthodox procedure.—L. A. Spencer, in Recreation.

Danger of Hypnotism.

Even with the best understanding of the subject now possible, there is danger in originating anything that puts a hypnotized person under his own control—in other words, that originates automatism, writes Dr. M. A. Yeeder in the Medical Record. So long as the subject is under the control of the hypnotist absolutely there is not so much danger, but let him go out on his own control and he runs without a balance wheel. In this way auto-suggestion, which fortunately is more difficult and exceptional, may originate exceedingly unpleasant results. The writer has even come to the conclusion that there may be cases of insanity confined to institutions that, if the truth were known, are really of this type.

about her, she would live, and lead and courtesy in anticipation of this very time, until she grew so haughty and overbearing she would fall to scold the tender, shrinking Cosette, which had been an orphan since the early springtime.

"Really, who are you? Please do tell us!" a waken, pink Begonia asked of her. "I have lived in flowerly circles all my life, and I never smelled such perfume as you have about you. I haven't any. 'Tis the grief of my life. I am only proud for my beauty and profuse blooming," and Begonia's sigh was lost in a bubble of questions which came from the Carnations. They did not fancy a rival at all; but for all the questions and options little Blue Violet remained a mystery still.

Then Violet grew out of her shyness and told the flower company of her life in the deep forest.

"Beautiful! Wonderful!" cried the flower hosts and Violet saw glistening tears in many eyes.

"We all grew in a greenhouse under a glass roof and the heat and the damp was nothing but a Turkish bath from morning until night," said a dignified Fern. "We had music to play to us and sighed the Rose. 'We could not even nod our heads together, in a friendly chat, that a cruel earner did not come along, with a stick and a string, and the us up as straight and prim as a castron poker.'"

"Tis awful!" wailed the Valley Lily; "we are cut with sharp scissels and crowded together, and after traveling a long way in the dark and the cold, we come here to be sold like slaves in the market."

"Yes, but we are no to parties," interrupted the Hederosea, "and to foreigners which are, oh, so sad!" cried

AND SHE FLOATED AWAY.

The Lilies. "To feast," continued the Rosebuds. "But we are so warm, and tired hearing and seeing nothing much that is good, we are left to wither and die," moaned the white waxes Jasmine.

Violet lost her shyness completely in this bubble of tongues and complaints. "I go to parties, too," she cried. "Bluebird and Robin always give the first party of the spring, and last time I danced with dainty Johnnie Wren, who had just returned from abroad; and he said I was the sweetest flower he had met in his travels."

"Oh-h-h-h!" Oh!" cried all the excited flowers. "How lovely! How charming!" and the perfume which floated about was stifling, and caused Violet to hang her head and long for the pure heavenly freshness of her own cool, woodland home.

But a faint blush came stealing over the eastern sky as the fairy queen appeared among them.

"Come home, dear Queen. I am very tired and faint," cried the Violet pleadingly, as she nestled in the fairy's arms, and the fairy smiled back to the City's throng as she floated away with a contented Blue Violet hugged to her breast.

This was the dream of little Nannette as she gazed in the window at the hot-house flowers in their stately splendor, while drooping in the corner lay a faded blue violet.—Kansas City Star.

THIS MY LIFE.

I strive to keep me in the sun;
I pick no quarrel with the years,
Nor with the fates—not even the one
That holds the others.

I take occasion by the hand;
I'm not too nice to twist and sever;
I do not stay to understand;
I take mine hour.

The time is short at best;
I push right onward while I may;
I open to the winds my breast,
And walk the way.

A kind heart grieves me here and there;
I hide from it my doubts and fears,
I refuse to say the path is fair.
Along the years,

HIS FATAL DELAY

By HAROLD ORLSON

THE poet, his far-lined overcoat buttoned over his chest, boldly faced the bitter wind that blew in from the sea. Half of a dark-red sun was hidden in the mark of a winter sky; the cold was intense, but Gerald was filled with a fine elation as he gazed over the waste of gray water.

For the moment he felt as a monarch over his kingdom; he was confident of viking ancestors; he knew Christine was watching him; he hoped his nose was not red.

Christine had explained to him that the car had been stopped on the cliff in order that Mr. Findeane might crawl under it and hit it with a hammer. She added that it seemed to her a mean thing to do. But while Gerald perfected an attitude she was urging the mechanic to hit harder; the situation was exposed. In spite, however, of her encouragement and advice, it was a considerable time before he cheerful countenance of Mr. Findeane appeared, to announce that he "thought she'd do now." The descendant of the vikings was glad to tuck his legs under the wraps and feel the distance that separated him from a comfortable fire lessening.

Gerald, coming on a visit to the Hartovers, had been met at the station by the pride and hope of that family (so Christine described herself) her cousin, Bob Findeane. They had whirled the unhappy poet, something of a hothouse plant, many miles over a frozen country, in order, as they explained, that he might acquire an appetite for his dinner.

All the previous acquaintance he had enjoyed with Christine had gone to show him that she was the only woman in the world whom he could rely on to make him happy. It was his great purpose to live surrounded by objects of beauty; his flat in town was a feast for the eye. And Christine, dainty, graceful, laughing Christine—would be strictly in keeping with his furniture.

After dinner Gerald succeeded in isolating Christine and himself and deep gloom settled on Bob Findeane. He could not understand how Christine tolerated the fellow's "unbearable sort of chap," was Bob's opinion. "Christine is getting very friendly with the celebrated poet," he remarked to Mr. Hartover.

"Yes." "He talked awful rot at dinner," continued Bob, as if seeking the secret of the poet's charm. "Said the flat and the life of the present day—I wonder if the car suggested it?"—said it was ruining society.

"Society likes being ruined," said Mr. Hartover, cheerfully. "For himself, he said, he liked solitude and peace. A quiet cavern in some distant hillside was—was his ticket. I say, I wish he'd got one." It was on the third day, and in the dusk of the afternoon, that Gerald and Christine happened to be alone together in the drawing-room, watching the flame of a great fire leap and flicker, casting on cheerful a light into the room that Christine had stoutly opposed the designs of a servant who had entered with matches.

For once Gerald had forgotten the value of words—his words—and had sat in silence for some time meditatively considering the teacup in his hands. It was Christine who spoke first.

"I believe we have both been dreaming," she said.

"Dreams are the wings that bear us to the pleasant lands, to the castles and fairy palaces," said the poet.

"Or to your cave?" asked Christine. "No, I was dreaming of a beautiful house, with bright flowers and old trees round it; with the sunlight streaming through great windows, giving life and youth to the fancies of dead painters on the walls; a house filled with the treasures that art gives to her servants, and with, above all—Gerald hesitated, for once at a loss for some effective suggestion.

Christine, serenely obtuse, suggested the roof.

"No," said Gerald, putting down his teacup and smiling faintly, "some one to pour out the tea."

The fire had sobered to a bright glow; in the shadow Christine sat motionless. Gerald recognized an advantage and was preparing to go into the matter more thoroughly when the door was opened.

"What, all in the dark?" came in cheerful tones from the doorway.

"Mother!" cried Christine, jumping up. "We did not expect you until tomorrow!"

Mrs. Hartover had not noticed Gerald in the darkness and for a moment Christine, a little anxious about the situation, hesitated to introduce him. A flood of light fell on the two through the open door. Gerald stood in the shadow, rigid, his hands gripping a chair back, staring wide-eyed as at a ghost.

He was watching Christine's mother.

All that evening he was enveloped in a dark cloud of silent meditation. He seemed to avoid Christine, and when he parted from Mr. Hartover for the night told him that he was very sorry that circumstances compelled him to bring his visit to a close on the following day.

So the poet went back to town and Christine dwelt in the country. She could forget; indeed, other matters occupied her attention so completely that she quite forgot. But he went less among his friends and the sorrowful note walked louder through his verses. Several days passed and still he hung about the door of his dream palace, fearful of entering, yet unable to stride boldly away. He could see Christine, picturing in his mind her graceful and charming figure. But there beside her was her mother, and in all likelihood, in after years, when his eyes must constantly dwell on her, she would be like her mother.

And her mother was the fattest woman he had ever seen.

On a bright February morning, about a week after he left the Hartovers, Gerald, utterly wearied of the ceaseless wrangling in his mind of "I will" and "I won't," and the mournful walling of "I wish I could," went out to find consolation. Knowing renunciation to be wisdom, yet clinging to folly, the idea came to him that he would visit his friend Felix, painter and musician.

Felix, away on a masterpiece, greeted him kindly, but without warmth, and went on with his painting.

Gerald began to wander aimlessly before a picture resting on an easel in a corner and looked long at it, wondering at a feeling of recognition in the face of the woman painted there. "Who is this?" he asked, presently. Felix looked up sharply, then turned to his work again.

"An old picture of mine," he said, briefly.

"So bad that the lady wouldn't have it?"

"So good that I wouldn't part with it," retorted Felix. "Christine Hartover called yesterday and I got it out."

"HER MOTHER," GASPED GERALD, to show her. It was her mother, you know."

"Her mother!" gasped Gerald. "But she's fat—enormously fat."

"She was the most beautiful woman I have ever seen."

"But I saw Mrs. Hartover a week ago and she is—"

"Christine's stepmother. What's up?"

The poet had seized his hat. In a moment all his doubts had been dispelled. He trod on air. He must go to Christine at once, throw himself at her feet and pour out his love.

But the deep voice of Felix came again from behind his easel: "Christine came for my congratulations. She is just engaged to young Findeane."

HOW COQUELIN'S WIT WON

By an Eloquent Illustration of Silence He Secured a Much Desired Club Membership.

One of the most famous of the Quarter Latin clubs in Paris is the one which is called "The Sub Rosa," and the most famous of its members is the great actor Coquelin, pere, but the story of his election has not yet been told in print, writes Warwick James Price, in Success Magazine.

He was present one night at the club's late supper, a wicker seat, and having heard that there was a vacancy in the roll, applied for membership. Now the only rules of the "Sub Rosa" men are: "Think much; write. Be as silent as you can." The presiding officer, with this last rule in mind, answered the applicant by placing before him a tumbler filled so full of water that another drop would have caused it to run over. Coquelin understood. He had evidently been misinformed about a vacancy, the club membership was obviously full.

Over the table was suspended a rose, the club emblem. While the glass still stood before him Coquelin broke a pedestal from the flower, and said gently on the water that not a single drop escaped. A silent man could join and make no trouble.

Around the table ran a ripple of smiles and little haughty nods of approval, and then, as if of one accord, all began making bread-balls. Then a cup was passed from hand to hand, and each man took a "ball" to go—and all were found to be round; not one had been pressed flat in sign of disapproval. So Coquelin joined the Sub Rosa club.

HOW THE CHINESE PUNISH
Orientals Cut Men to Pieces, Believing This Best Punishment of Several of the Worst Crimes.

Wu Ting-fang, long Chinese minister in Washington has succeeded in inducing the imperial government at Peking to abolish some of its cruel punishments. An imperial edict of April 24 gives Wu and Shen Chiapen credit for suggesting the changes and then proceeds: "At the beginning of the dynasty when our sovereignty extended within the great wall, the most severe punishment was beheading. In the year of Hsin Jui, however, when we revised the laws, we permitted the introduction of those punishments which had been prevalent in the Ming dynasty, hence ling chi (cutting to pieces) was allowed for certain crimes. It has always been distasteful to us to resort to these punishments, and it does not fulfill our idea of showing mercy to the people. Now that we are once more revising the laws, therefore, we hereby order that for all variations of the crime of taking life, beheading shall be the extreme penalty in future; ling chi, exposure of the detached head, and mutilation of the corpse must be abolished forever."

As a consequence of this abolition all the other punishments are moved down a grade in severity. The laws where the words ling chi occur, for instance, will have chan chueh, or simple decapitation, substituted. The penalty of chan hsiao, or what might be termed compound decapitation, or the entire removal of the head and exposure of the same, must hereafter read chan chueh, or strangulation on sentence. This is supposed to be a far more honorable death than decapitation and was formerly reserved for princes and other great men. Strangulation, however, has its own subtle distinctions, and the penalty of chan chueh will be hereafter modified to chiao chien huo, or awaiting in prison under sentence of strangulation. This difference is the difference between certain death and having a chance of reprieve.

Among other complications of Chinese law and its execution is a unique and rather rare method of dealing with prisoners by lottery. Once a year the vermilion pencil of imperial authority is waved over a chart on which the names of convicted criminals are written, and those which it includes in a haphazard sweep are executed forthwith. The rest are either reprieved altogether or their executions are postponed for another year.

Another important reform is the abolition of the "condemned" brand on the faces of the prisoners. Hitherto all who have been sentenced to banishment for robbery and other serious crimes have been tattooed on the face, in order to mark them as criminals for life.

TO YOUR OWN INTEREST

Go, And See That All Your Neighbors And Their Families Go.

As the time for the barbecue at Gracey draws near preparations for the great event are nearing completion. The committee having in hand the duty of feeding the crowd have everything coming their way and everything will be ready for next Thursday. The speakers will be James, John W. Gaines and Col.
P. G. Ewing, and Mr. C. P. Warfield, and in the event one of them should be unable to attend, a reserve force of well informed men will fill his place. There is nothing left out in the arrangements and everything will be perfected for the greatest of all events. Everybody is invited and will be amply provided for.
Good music by a brass band, fine speakers, reduced rates on the railroads, real old-time Kentucky barbecue, and the discussion of a question of vital importance to tobacco growers ought to, and we doubt not, will bring out the people to the number of many thousands.

A HAPPY MAN.

BY EDEN PHILPOTTS.

A succession of dry days was ended and already the wind, turning south of west, blew chill and told of rain. On a wild combe, uplifted in untamed loneliness above the valleys, I stood and marked how the horizon of leaden blue merged slowly into the clouds that darkened above it. Yesterday the west had flamed at sunset hour; now increasing gloom hid the sun; and already one doubted whether it was the sun's leaves that patterned on the heath, as they flew untraced, or the noise of the first drops of the rain.

The ridges of the land, albeit turned to that somber tint, yet stood clear out above the dim winter green of the fields. The naked elms towered there; and yet, seen close at hand, they wore their hibernal garb no longer, for already blossom buds thickened and the rosy inflorescence was preparing to deck each giant with innumerable flowers. Stipules were swelling in the heart of the woods; the honeysuckle budded; the elder's lush foliage, scorched a little by the last frost, expanded; a thousand buds strained their cases and wrote life in every hedgerow; the blackthorn was foaming against the dark background of the woods.

I stood upon a heath and heard the song of the rain coming with the wind. It thrilled through dead heather, and its husky untimeliness was not unusual; it sighed in the fan across of the red bracken; it whispered where silver birches stood, like columns of silver beneath their winter veil of amethystine twigs. Thus, like a robe of rain, wept around about them. Glistening hollies were scattered over the heath, first broke the covert edge hard by, and the highest color note that touched this scene was the glaucous bloom of juniper foliage.

The waiting before rain is a time of mystery, and at such moments I have seen, as it were, the hidden gleam touch these untraced creatures of woods and waste. Even as among the birds and beasts, so amid the trees, least herbs, and fleeting animals knowledge moves, and with signs and thirty experience, with closed petals or murmur of young leaves, they welcome the delayed thunder cloud and prepare to drink their fill. A figure moved upon the heath, and there came a young man to me. He whistled as he went, and smiled upon the face of nature, as though she, too, smiled. We met, he had the "good day" with such heartiness that I responded in like manner, and marched along his path to learn, if I might, the secret of his generous contentment and joy of life.

"The wind is cold, and the rain will be colder," I said.

"Be it!" he asked. "Can't say as I've felt it strike chill; but no doubt 'tis so, since you say it."

"A lonely place this," I remarked.

"You might call it lonely in a manner of speaking," he answered; "but there's houses within a mile. My young—"

He broke off and whistled again.

"The man was absolutely of commonplace type and demeanor. He had been spreading manure on a meadow, and he carried his fork over his shoulder. Yet from him beamed a wealth of happiness."

I sought the subject most likely to cast him down.

"Heavy work on the land soon," I said.

"Ees, thank God," he answered; "more work, more money." Then I perceived that this man was for the moment sorrow proof.

Already gold flamed on the crest of the gorse, and the warm fragrance of it breathed out like a blessing.

"A good sign," I said. "Perhaps you know that kissing's in season now the furze blooms?"

He smiled indulgently.

"'Tis always in season—so long as you've got somebody as'll kiss 'e," he answered.

"Right! And you're one of the lucky ones?"

He eyed me cautiously.

"Who might ye be, master?" he asked.

"A workman."

"What be your hours, then?"

"All the day."

"Then you don't waste your time, I'll wager!"

"We all waste our time. When you're not working you're wasting time."

"No, by God, I ban't!" he said, with great conviction, and his thoughts turned inward.

"And she's wasting her, too—come, now!"

He stared.

"The murderer's out, then!" he said.

"How did you guess as we were taken?"

"Why, it's all over you, mate!"

"'Tis true enough, for that matter," he confessed; "an' the best woman in the world, but I'm ashamed that the thing do look so clear to the neighbors."

"I know the signs. You're a lucky man, and I congratulate you."

"Twice on this very heath two days ago she said it."

"'Twill never be a barren heath again to you, then."

Cold rain began to beat the evening light, and I retreated before it; but my lover went on his way indifferent and whistled at the darkness as it gathered, and at the wind as it wailed over those desolate spaces. He neither knew that rain was falling nor that the sun had set.

So the heart of man makes its own weather. To-day it turns night into dawn and laughter; to-morrow it saddens noon and moves darkly beneath its own storm cloud of suffering. The young man marched hand in hand with happiness; I moved through lonely avenues of grief; love and life beckoned him onward to the gates of spring; love and death led my spirit back into winter—Chicago Tribune.

RICHARD WILDER

Makes Reply to Letter of R. E. Cooper, President of Home Tel. Co.

To the Public:

In his letter in the Kentuckian of the 29th, President R. E. Cooper, of the Home (?) Telephone Company, evades entirely the question propounded to him through the columns of the New Era of the 24th, which said question is as follows:

Can you prove the statements made in my communication to the people of Christian county are not true? If so, let the public hear from you.

Instead of answering the said question, Mr. Cooper wilfully misquotes my original letter which stated that I did not "aim to take the side of either Telephone Company doing business in your (Christian) county;" or in other words that I did not aim to take up, in the said letter, questions as to the merits or demerits of either company's service, but that I simply intended to give to the people to whom the letters were addressed some information that might be of benefit to them.

Mr. Cooper says that my statements attacking the condition of the Home Telephone Company are untrue. Will Mr. Cooper please be good enough to answer the following questions:

1. Do you deny that the property of the Home Telephone Company is mortgaged for $100,000.00, and that it has also a capital stock of $100,000.00.

2. Knowing, as I do, that its property is mortgaged for $100,000.00 and that its capital stock is $100,000.00, I ask if you are willing to state that the intrinsic value of its property is $200,000.00? In other words, do you say that the face value of the $100,000.00 mortgage referred to has been paid in dollars and cents into the Company's treasury and put into its property and that its capital stock is fully paid and non-assessable?

3. Do you know that the property of the Home Telephone Company is not worth $200,000.00? And if you do not know, would you be willing to state on oath that you believe the intrinsic value of its property to be $200,000.00?

4. What tangible assets does the capital stock of the Home Telephone Company represent?

5. Is it not true that representatives of the Home Telephone Company, of which you are president, have solicited farmers in Christian county to buy its stock?

6. Did not the representatives above referred to make the statement that the first year's dividend would be 18 per cent. and that their plan was to pay said dividend in telephone service in lieu of the parties who were solicited paying the first year's rental for the use of the telephone to be placed by you for them.

7. Do you say that the Home

Telephone Company is earning its operating expenses, fixed charges in the way of bond interest, depreciation, etc., and 18 per cent. annually in addition thereto?

8. If the Home Telephone Company is earning enough to defray expenses above referred to and pay a dividend of 18 per cent. on its capital stock, why would you want to sell the stock? And do you think it would be necessary to peddle and hawk the stock among the farmers of Christian county in order that it might be sold? And don't you think that if its earning power was so enormous that as soon as it became generally known that people would flock into the offices of the Home Telephone Company and clamor for the stock?

9. If the Home Telephone Company's revenues are not sufficient for the purposes above referred to, do you not know that the sale of the stock to the farmers of the county on the basis aforesaid is equivalent to the farmers paying $100.00, or whatever amount you may ask for the stock for one year's telephone service?

10. Do you deny that under the laws of Kentucky, the holder of a corporation stock which is not paid in, or fulfilled, is liable for the debts of the corporation in double the amount, or face value, of the stock held?

11. Do you deny that in event the Hopkinsville Home Telephone Company should default in paying its bond interest, i.e., fail to pay the interest on aforesaid mortgage against its property, that the law gives the bondholders the right to foreclose on the property and take charge of it, regardless of the stockholders, and further that the law gives the bondholders' claims precedence over the claims of stockholders and all others.

MURDER MYSTERY.

Woman Found Dead With Bullet in Her Body.

Mrs. Pearce J. Luster, wife of the manager of the Cumberland Telegraph Company at Guthrie, was found dead in bed Saturday morning with a bullet wound in her side. Decomposition had set in, and from appearance the woman had been dead about two days. The husband of the murdered woman disappeared from Guthrie last Thursday and his whereabouts are unknown. He had lived in Guthrie about ten years, and for the past six years had been manager of the Guthrie exchange.

The couple was last seen together Thursday evening on their veranda. There was no evidence of a struggle in the house and the discovery of the body was not made until some of the telephone employees, alarmed by the absence of Luster from the office, forced an entrance into the house. A search was made for a revolver, but no weapon was found in the room.

Mrs. Luster was a daughter of J. L. Hill, a Nashville manufacturer, and a niece of Leland Hume, Secretary and Assistant General Manager of the Cumberland Telephone Company. The couple had no children. The remains were taken to Nashville for interment.
